

106. [THE SOUL OF MAN.] NOSCJS
TEIPSUM! \??!$ ^.

He keeps it doubtless 1 and can us# it too!, And doth both th'other skills, in power retain 1 And can of both the proper actions do, . If with Jus Lute,, or Horse he meet again.

So, though the instruments by which we live And view the world, the Body's death doth kill: Yet with the Body, they shall all revive; And all .their wonted offices fulfil!

¹⁶ But *how*₉ till then, shall She herself employ?
₃ objection. Her spies are dead; which brought home news before!
What she hath got and keeps, she may enjoy;
But She hath means to understand no more i "

¹¹ Then what do those poor Souls which nothing get? Or what do those which get and nothing keep, Like buckets bottomless, which all out let ? Those Souls, for want of exercise, must sleep!

See how Man's Soul, against itself doth strive!
Answer Why should we not have other means to know? As children, white within the womb they live, Feed by the navel; Here, they feed not so !

These children (if they had some use of Sense, And should by chance their mothers talking, hear ; That, in short time, they shall come forth from thence) Would fear their birth, more than our death we fear !

They would cry out, " If we, this place shall leave, Then shall we break our tender navel strings ! How shall we then our nourishment receive ? Since our sweet food, no other conduit brings!^{J?}

And if a man should, to these babes reply, That «' Into this fair world they shall be brought! Where they shall see the earth, the sea, the sky, The glorious sun, and all that GOD hath wrought!
